

Freedom of Information Act 2000 (FOIA)

Decision notice

Date: 11 December 2013

Public Authority: South Wales Fire and Rescue Service

Address: Forest View Business Park

Llantrisant

Pontyclun

CF72 8LX

Decision (including any steps ordered)

---

1. The complainant has requested information from South Wales Fire and Rescue Service ("the fire service") relating to Origin Fertilisers (UK) Ltd. The fire service refused to supply requested information in reliance of the exemptions provided by sections 24(1) (national security), 31 (law enforcement) and 38 (health and safety) of the FOIA.
2. The Commissioner's decision is that the fire service is entitled to rely on section 24(1) of the FOIA as the basis for withholding the information sought by the complainant.
3. No steps are required.

Request and response

4. On 26 April 2013, the complainant wrote to the fire service and requested information in the following terms:
  1. "Please provide copies of the most recent fire inspection report for the following company (I have been unable to locate a full address for this site):
    - a. Origin Fertilisers (UK) Ltd – Newport.
  2. Please provide any other information held in relation to the following company (I have been unable to locate a full address for this site):
    - a. Origin Fertilisers (UK) Ltd – Newport"

5. 22 May 2013 the fire service responded to the complainant's request. It advised her that in relation to question 1 and question 2 of her request, it is refusing to provide the information it holds in reliance of section 24(1) (national security) of the FOIA. The fire service also determined that section 38(1) (health and safety) and section 31 (law enforcement) is also applicable to the information it holds.
6. The fire service found one piece of information which it was able to disclose to the complainant. This is a communication between the fire service and Origin Fertilisers (UK) Ltd. The fire service redacted the name of one of the recipients of the document in reliance of section 40(2) of the FOIA (personal data of a third party).
7. The complainant requested an internal review on 28 May 2013.
8. The fire service completed its internal review and sent this to the complainant on 5 June 2013. The fire service confirmed to the complainant that it held three pieces of information relevant to her request.
9. The fire service had already provided the complainant with the document identified at paragraph 6 above, and now provided a redacted document entitled 'Fire Safety Audit and Data Gathering Form'. Where information had been redacted the fire service made reference to sections 24, 31, 38 and 40 of the FOIA.
10. The fire service withheld a document, referred to as 'Site Information'. It advised the complainant that the release of this document presents a significant risk to the premises being targeted by criminals and therefore sections 24, 31 and 38 apply.

Scope of the case

11. The complainant contacted the Commissioner on 25 June 2013 to complain about the way her request for information had been handled. The complainant provided the following arguments in support of her position that the information she had requested should be disclosed by the fire service:
  - a) "I believe there is a strong public interest in disclosing the information to promote accountability and transparency of public authorities for the decisions taken by them, to allow individuals, companies and other bodies to understand decisions made by public authorities affecting their lives and to bring to light information that could affect public health and safety.

- b) In light of the recent incident in Waco, Texas releasing this information could reassure the public that safety procedures are in place to protect those living close to companies involved in the fertiliser industry and to protect those who work on these sites and the emergency brigades who would have to attend any incident if it were to occur.
  - c) The information that these companies are involved in the fertiliser industry is already publicly available so it would already be known that these companies would hold fertilisers and other chemicals."
12. The Commissioner's investigation of this complaint was focussed on the fire service's application of sections 24 (1), 31 and 38(1) of the FOIA.
13. In this decision notice the Commissioner has considered whether the fire service is entitled to withhold the information sought by the complainant in reliance of the exemptions it has cited.

Reasons for decision

Section 24(1) – National security

14. Section 24(1) of the FOIA states:

"Information which does not fall within section 23(1) [information supplied by, or relating to, bodies dealing with security matters] is exempt information if exemption from section 1(1)(b) is required for the purpose of safeguarding the national security."

15. In broad terms section 24(1) allows a public authority not to disclose information if it considers that the release of the information would make the United Kingdom or its citizens vulnerable to a national security threat.
16. The term "national security" is not specifically defined by UK or European law. However in Norman Baker v the Information Commissioner and the Cabinet Office (EA/2006/0045 4 April 2007) the Information Tribunal was guided by a House of Lords case, Secretary of State for the Home Department v Rehman [2001] UKHL 47, concerning whether the risk posed by a foreign national provided grounds for his deportation. The Information tribunal summarised the Lords' observations as:
- "national security" means the security of the United kingdom and its people;

- The interests of national security are not limited to actions by the individual which are targeted at the UK, its system of government or its people;
  - The protection of democracy and the legal and constitutional systems of the state are part of national security as well as military defence;
  - Action against a foreign state may be capable indirectly of affecting the security of the UK; and
  - Reciprocal cooperation between the UK and other states in combating international terrorism is capable of promoting the United Kingdom's national security.
17. The exemption provided by section 24 applies in circumstances where withholding the requested information is "required for the purpose of safeguarding national security". Required is taken to mean that the use of the exemption is reasonably necessary.
18. "Required" is defined by the Oxford English Dictionary as 'to need something for a purpose'. This could suggest that the exemption can only be applied if it is absolutely necessary to do so to protect national security. However, the Commissioner's interpretation is informed by the approach taken in the European Court of Human Rights, where the interference of human rights can be justified where it is 'necessary' in a democratic society for safeguarding national security. 'Necessary' in this context is taken to mean something less than absolutely essential but more than simply being useful or desirable. The Commissioner therefore interprets 'required' as meaning 'reasonably necessary'.
19. It is not necessary to show that disclosing the withheld information would lead to a direct threat to the United Kingdom.
20. The Commissioner's approach is set out by the House of Lords in Secretary of State for the Home Department v Rehman (as referred to above). Lord Slynn found that:
- "To require the matters in question to be capable or resulting 'directly' in a threat to national security limits too tightly the discretion of the executive in deciding how the interests of the state, including not merely military defence but democracy, the legal and constitutional systems of the state need to be protected. I accept that there must be a real possibility of an adverse effect on the United Kingdom for what is done by the individual under inquiry but I do not accept that it has to be direct or immediate."

21. The Commissioner considers that safeguarding national security also includes protecting potential targets even if there is no evidence that an attack is imminent.
22. The Commissioner has carefully examined the information held by the fire service. This information can be characterised as being essential operational intelligence information.
23. The Commissioner has determined that the withheld information should be considered as a single entity. He considers that it would be inappropriate to consider the information on a line-by-line or document-by-document basis.
24. The Commissioner understands that the fire service inspects/audits a wide range of premises which fall under the Regulatory Reform (Fire Safety) Order 2005. Such an audit may be required as part of a planning application; may result from a complaint being made by a member of the public; may follow an incident at a particular premises; or, may be requested by an agency such as the Health and Safety Executive.
25. The information obtained by the fire service is required by section 7(2)(d) of the Fire and Rescue Service Act 2004.
26. Under section 7(1) of the Fire and Rescue Services Act, the fire service is required to make provision for the purpose of extinguishing fires in its area and for protecting life and property in the event of fire. Under section 7(2)(d) the fire service is required to make arrangements for obtaining information which is needed so that it can properly execute its duties under section 7(1).
27. In this case, the fire service has provided the Commissioner with persuasive arguments which describe how its operational intelligence could be used by persons of a criminal intent to jeopardise or make vulnerable the infrastructure of the United Kingdom and the health and safety of its citizens.
28. The Commissioner has considered the operational intelligence held by the fire service and its detailed representations. He has concluded that the withheld information has direct relevance to the United Kingdom's national security and he therefore accepts that section 24(1) is engaged.

Section 24(1) – Balance of the public interest test

29. Section 24(1) is a qualified exemption. In order for the fire service to rely on this exemption the public interest arguments favouring disclosure of the withheld information must outweigh the public interest favouring withholding it.

Public interest arguments favouring disclosure

30. It is a statutory requirement under section 7(2)(d) of the Fire and Rescue Services Act 2004 for the fire service to undertake familiarisation visits to inspect/audit a wide range of premises. During these visits operational intelligence is gathered to assist the fire service to effectively and safely deal with an incident at those premises.
31. The operational intelligence held by the fire service is acquired primarily for the purpose of assisting it to effectively extinguish fires and to protect life and property. This information is designed for, and limited to, that function.
32. In the Commissioner's opinion the disclosure of the operation intelligence information would be of limited legitimate utility to the public.
33. He does however accept that its disclosure would assure the public that the information is appropriate and adequate for its purpose, that the fire service has fulfilled its statutory duties in making appropriate familiarisation visits and would assist the public in understanding the actions taken by the fire brigade in the event of an incident.

Public interest arguments against disclosure

34. The withheld information is clearly designed to satisfy the operational needs of the fire service and of other emergency services.
35. The Commissioner understands that it is an accurate record of the information the fire service has gathered. He is also satisfied that the information is appropriate for meet the fire service's operational requirements.
36. The Commissioner further understands that the fire service inspects/audits a wide variety of premises. Some of the premises visited by the fire service are places where hazardous materials, such as inorganic nitrogenous fertilisers, are produced and/or stored.
37. It is well documented that inorganic nitrogenous fertilisers have been misused by terrorists for the production of homemade explosives. Consequently it is important for the fire service to work collaboratively with the Centre for Protection of National Infrastructure (CPNI)<sup>1</sup> and the

National Counter Terrorism Security Office (NaCTSO)<sup>2</sup> to identify and protect sites that store hazardous materials.

38. It is inevitable that the fire service will record information relating to the production and storage of hazardous materials, including inorganic nitrogenous fertilizers, when making its inspection/audit visits. This information is of vital importance to the fire service and the Commissioner acknowledges that this operational intelligence – an accurate record of the amount and location of the fertilisers, ensures that the fire service can effectively deal with incidents at these premises. The Commissioner is entirely confident that the possession of this information is likely to reduce the loss of life and property and significantly add to the safety of the fire officers attending any incident.
39. The Commissioner must consider the potential consequences that would ensue if the information held by the fire service was to be disclosed. He has reviewed the representations made by the fire service along with the withheld information itself. He is persuaded that disclosure of the information could result in a real and significant threat to the national security of the United Kingdom.

Balance of the public interest

40. In cases where the Commissioner considers that section 24(1) is engaged – as in this case, there will always be a compelling argument in maintaining the exemption in situations where a severe harm may flow from the disclosure of the requested information to the public. For the public interest to favour disclosure there must be specific and clearly decisive factors in favour of that disclosure. Without such evidence the Commissioner is compelled to recognise the public interest inherent in the exemption and afford this appropriate weight.
41. The Commissioner recognises the public interest in learning more about the work of the fire service in respect of the types of premises identified by the complainant. He acknowledges the risks posed by these premises and that there is a legitimate public interest in knowing how the fire service would deal with incidents at these sites. In this respect he is also mindful of the incident at the West Fertilizer Company in Texas on 17 April 2013, where a large explosion involving ammonium nitrate fertilisers resulted in the deaths of fifteen people and the destruction of 150 buildings.

42. The Commissioner is required to weigh the public interest arguments associated with the accountability and transparency of the operating practices of the fire service against the threat posed to the national security of the United Kingdom.
43. The commissioner is always sympathetic to arguments which genuinely promote the accountability and transparency of public authorities in respect of their work and the decisions they make. In this case however these arguments cannot be reconciled with the necessary weight which must be given to maintaining the national security of the United Kingdom.
44. It is the Commissioner's view that the information held by the fire brigade is of limited legitimate utility to persons or organisations outside of the fire brigade and organisations associated with national security. There is clear evidence that the information sought by the complainant could be open to misuse and be potentially damaging to our national security. For this reason the Commissioner has decided that the balance of the public interest significantly lies with maintaining the section 24(1) exemption.
45. The Commissioner is satisfied that the fire brigade can rely on section 24(1) as the basis for withholding the information sought by the complainant.
46. Given the Commissioner's conclusion in respect of section 24(1), he has not gone on to consider the fire service's application of sections 31 and 38 to the withheld information.
